It's about pointing out to everyone that all the antigun guys who claim that they want to curb the "random shootings" are complete hypocrites because, after all, they're not actually going to use the gun for real. I get as sick as hell of the victims being taken into custody at the scene of the crime, as if the police are taking the owner of the weapon into custody, as well, they need to restore the gun to him afterward. The gun should be confiscated by police and the gun should be returned to the owner after the gun is tested for fingerprints and DNA evidence. Of course, if there are any thoughts of genocide, the owner of the gun should be held accountable. On the other hand, by not holding the owner of the gun accountable, then the rule is that anyone can get their gun and start shooting up a neighborhood on a whim and no one needs to put down the gun or stand up against them or anything else. Something needs to be done to stop the flow of guns to people who have no business with the guns. But, since the level of gun violence in the US is of no consequence to anyone, that seems very difficult to do. And, the daily fact that gun suicides are in fact more common than accidental gun psicopatología infantil adolescencia carlos almonte pdf 238 This invention relates generally to the field of digital video recording and playback and, more particularly, to the use of video decoding hardware in a digital video recorder. Digital video recorders (DVRs) provide a variety of user features to assist users in managing their viewing experiences. For example, DVRs typically allow users to record and play video content. DVRs typically include a digital video recorder (DVR) server that manages the recording of content for the DVR and the playback of recorded content. DVRs have become increasingly popular, as they provide a number of advantageous features, such as the ability to easily search through a large number of recorded content, to preview recorded content, to create personalized playlists, and to schedule content for future recording. In general, a DVR is a computer system, having a processing unit and a local or networked memory, that can record digital video streams from a television or other video source for later playback. In a typical configuration, the DVR server is a computer system that has a processing unit, system memory (e.g., random access memory), and a media server. In operation, the server processes video streams received from a cable service provider or a satellite service provider, records the video streams using its local or networked memory, and makes the stored video streams available to users, such as via a network connection and a set-top box. The set-top box can connect to and communicate with the DVR server using a wired or wireless network. In order to provide some of the more advanced features of DVRs, the DVR server includes media processing functionality. For example, the media server has a sufficient amount of memory to temporarily buffer video streams of different types, such as closed caption video streams (also referred to herein as caption streams), video streams with multiple audio tracks (also referred to herein as multiple-stream video streams), and video streams with multiple audio and video tracks (also referred to herein as multi-stream video streams), for editing or selectively viewing.
